Vodka

The word vodka comes from the Slavic "voda" meaning water, and vodka contains ethanol & water. It is typically colourless and flavourless, and when first sold in the United States it was marketed as white whisky. Vodka originated in Poland in the 1400s, and the alcoholic strength is between 35-50%, but in the European Union the minimum strength is 37.5%

Blended Whiskey

Malt whisky is mainly sold to blenders, who mix it with grain whisky to give a consistent flavour. Grain whisky is made from a grain other than barley, such as wheat or maize. Two casks of malt, from the same batch aged for the same period of time, will not always be identical to each other, so a blender will use his skill to make one expression

Malt Whiskey

Whisky is a spirit made from three ingredients – water, barley and yeast, and malt whisky is produced from a single type of barley at a single distillery. To be known as Scotch, the whisky must be aged for at least three years in oak, bottled at no less than 40% volume and made in a Scottish distillery from water, malted barley and caramel colouring and fermented only by the addition of yeast. The name whisky comes from the Scottish Gaelic uisge-beatha, which means water of life.
